

Cox Communications Works with White House to Connect Households with Affordable Internet

ATLANTA and WASHINGTON D.C. - May 9, 2022 – Leaders from Cox join White House officials today to announce a partnership about the Affordable Connectivity Program (ACP), making high-speed internet more affordable and accessible to households across the nation.

In participating in the ACP, eligible households will have access to Cox's 100 Mbps high-speed internet service at no cost.

"Our commitment to digital equity continues to be our guiding purpose in ensuring that families stay connected at an affordable cost," said Mark Greatrex, president of Cox Communications. "By participating in ACP, we can reach more low-income households with high-speed reliable internet service."

On March 16, 2022, Cox announced the company's alignment to ACP and doubled the download speeds of the company's low-cost internet products Connect2Compete and ConnectAssist to 100 mbps. With the alignment to the ACP $30 subsidy, more people can receive free internet access at higher speeds. Connecting Rural Communities

On February 17, 2022, Cox announced more than $400M over the next three years will be designated to expand its footprint to reach underserved and rural communities. These efforts will allow Cox to provide fast and reliable internet service to more than 100K new homes and businesses in communities near its existing footprint.

Cox has a long-standing commitment to narrowing the digital divide and has connected more than 1.4M people to the internet through Cox enabled Digital Equity programs.
